How to Attract Success in Your Life

David McCallister, DTM - District 25 Governor

Do you find yourself butting your head against the wall of success? Are you caught up in a revolving door going around and around? When you look at where you are in life, do you think you should be further ahead? Not long ago, I reviewed my goals. If you know me, you might realize that I am a dreamer. I have BIG dreams. But there are days when I, too, am frustrated. I feel like I am spinning my wheels of success in one place.

On the outside, many people think I have it all together. They think I am so successful and I have arrived. Don't get me wrong, I am happy with the success I have had so far in my life. I am living my dream. I am thankful. I face everyday with excitement and passion with purpose.

I am doing something I truly love. Life is wonderful compared to what it was. I am successfully pressing on to greater things. But I have had my share of frustration along the way.

Well, unlike many who are too busy trying to make a living instead of designing a life, I took the time to examine what I might be doing wrong. And my findings are really astonishing. I discovered that my doings are not in alignment with my being. And that may be your problem, too. Let me explain.

Imagine for a moment that your mind is a garden. It is impossible to grow apples from a watermelon seed. But it seems as though that is exactly what we are trying to do when it comes to aligning the seeds in our minds versus the harvest we want as a result.

Seeds of doubt and fear planted in our minds can reap their own sort of crop. If you wake up doubting whether you will make it or not, it doesn't matter how much you have done for the day, you will not make much progress. You must believe!

That's why you and I can't afford to let others dump their negative opinions in our heads and take them as the gospel truth. It's dangerous to our success! Most people will not utter one sentence without injecting some kind of fear or doubt in us. And keep in mind that the more influence others have on you, the more damage you allow them to do.

One seed of fear is like a weed. Once allowed to enter our minds, it can grow wild and suffocate the good in you. I am sure you have heard that success is an inside job. We must first create it in our minds and intensely believe it is ours before it can become a reality. Others never let us down. We let ourselves down. Does that make sense to you?

Take a good look at your own personal garden (your mind), and notice all of the weeds that may have overtaken it. Do you know how those weeds got there? Five years from now, if you are not careful, you may become what the people around you believe instead of what you wish for yourself. Be sure to always surround yourself with positive and successful people.

The Two Key Elements

David D. Martin, DTM- Lt. Governor Education & Training 2009-2010

What are the two key elements of being a better speaker? One element is the art of effective listening. The second is effective evaluations.

Everyone knows time spent researching, writing, and reciting are all good practices in having a quality speech. Listening with an attentive ear to others as they give speeches allows you to glean valuable insight. Do you admire the research, intonation, or gesture incorporation used by your fellow toastmasters? They say imitation is the best form of flattery. Imitate these qualities when you are developing and practicing your own speeches. Research allows you to show your audience that you want to provide knowledgeable and useful information that lends merit to the message you are disseminating. Your audience will appreciate the effort you put forth.

Intonation or using expansive vocal variety can add suspense, emotion, and humor to your speech. It will also add to the enjoyment of your listening audience. Using these techniques can elevate anxiety and make you appear more spontaneous in your presentation, although practice as we know makes perfect.

Purposeful gestures are the craft of a seasoned toastmaster. Speakers who no longer wring their wrists or clasp their hands in front of them are more confident in their presentation. These speakers have learned to keep random gestures at bay and allow controlled meaningful gestures to succor a relevant point in their story.

Following these attributes of seasoned toastmasters will broaden your own skill set in speaking and will allow you to expand the feedback you give for an effective evaluation.

What makes an effective evaluation? You have to put your listening cap on and site examples of what good toastmaster skills the speaker already possess. Follow through with some areas of improvement. You want the speaker to learn from a different perspective and be able to use your advice when either giving the speech again or when they develop their next speech. A toastmasters meeting is a positive and safe learning environment. Use this opportunity to aid your fellow toastmaster in developing their skills as they travel the path to DTM and beyond.

Better speakers are formed through the tried and true processes of research writing and reciting. The best speakers not only use these steps but also learn from others through effective listening and effective evaluations. Listen well and practice what you preach.

Wow! Seventeen New Clubs!

Diana Patton, DTM—Lieutenant Governor Marketing 2009-2010

This has been an incredible year for District 25. We were one of the first three districts to achieve Distinguished status before end of April. We have lots more time to see more members and clubs achieve goals they set at the first of the year which in turn will help our District reach Select Distinguished or even President’s Distinguished.

One success our district has had is the new clubs we have added to our district. When I think back at the beginning of this year I never imagined we would be able to charter 17 clubs by the end of April. With the dedication and assistance of so many members that eagerly agreed to help at a pre-charter meeting or to be a club sponsor or mentor has made all the difference. These 17 clubs are on their way to being successful.

Several clubs that were assigned club coaches will finish the year with net gain of 5 and being distinguished. Those clubs and coaches have added to the success of our district.

Each member of our 17 new clubs, each sponsor, each mentor, each club coach, each officer and members of District 25—a round of applause goes to each of you for making our district strong and successful. Keep up the good work.

ARE YOU ON THE LIST?

Are you just a few speeches away from your next education award or perhaps have already completed it and just haven't sent it in? Is your club a few members or goals short of achieving Distinguished or better? Make the commitment to complete your CC or AC award. If your club is already Distinguished, commit to achieving Select or Presidents Distinguished. Those that complete the commitment will be recognized on the District website, published in the District newsletter, and rewarded at the 2010 Awards Dinner in August. Also, those making the commitment and completing by June 25 will receive a special gift from the district governor PLUS up to six free manuals/modules. Do you want to see those who have already made the commitment and perhaps encourage them along their journey? Do you want to make the commitment? If so, you can learn more and submit your commitment online here: www.d25toastmasters.org/commit.html

MARKETING WORKSHOP

Saturday July 17, 2010

Facilitator: Lark Doley, DTM, PID

All members and clubs are welcome to attend! Learn valuable tips, tricks, and the secrets to successful Toastmaster clubs. Find out how to not only gain members for your club but also to retain them. Special Announcement to Club Officers

Please help your club members prepare for single sign-on at members.toastmasters.org.

The Toastmasters Web site is being updated, and how members log in will change. Beginning in July 2010, a unique e-mail address registered with World Headquarters will be required from any Toastmaster who wants to conduct business, purchase products or enjoy new online membership benefits. As a result, it is vital that every Toastmaster has his or her own personal e-mail account – and that the e-mail address is registered with World Headquarters by June 30.

Shared e-mail accounts will no longer work to access the Toastmasters Web site. You may update until June 30, 2010, you may do this by going online at members.toastmasters.org or calling World Headquarters at 949-858-8255 and asking for Member Services.
